

Madeline,

This is your Dave, the Chief Strategist from the Global Business Services division. I was hoping you could help me analyze our movie data for some business and personal questions. We were looking to partner with a streaming service platform to provide our customers discounts on high quality content. Here are the questions that our division needs you to answer:

Can you tell me which platform has the most movies represented?

Can you tell us which platform we should partner with to provide the most enjoyable content to our customers?

Our company wants to represent diversity, particularly in the country of origin of the partner platform's films. Can you find movies from countries that are not well represented in the database, let's say if the country only appears once? Which platforms are those movies are on?

Which country has the most representation in the data set for movies intended for adult audiences and which has the most for young children?

Can you tell me the most and least popular genres in the data set? Please provide the movie titles, movie languages, and genre. Choose whichever rating system. By the way, order it by year but do not provide the year in your outputs. My team wants to guess the date of release of the movies for our team bonding activity.

We would like to publicly release our partnership through a marketing campaign on a holiday using features from a holiday-related movie or a movie from Steven Spielberg, since his work is very famous. We want to be sure the movie is holiday-related, so if the title contains Halloween, Christmas, or Hanukkah then we would like to have the title, platform availability, and the directors' names.

Which subscription provider has the most family movies? We are considering partnering with the most family-oriented platform to provide an exclusive service to our customers.

Are there any unusual movies where a given rating system have much higher scores than the other?

Now I have a couple of personal questions. My son loves movies and I told him I would find some good films for us to watch together over the summer.

My son loves thriller movies and is learning Japanese in school. So, I want you to find us a good thriller (>75% approval). I would prefer the movie is in Japanese, but if it is in English, I do not mind. I cannot sit still for too long so the movie must be less than 2 hours.

I also want you to find a terrible, foreign, horror film. Many of my executive colleagues enjoy watching bad horror films for the humor (e.g. Attack of the 50 Foot Cheerleader) and I want to impress them with one they certainly have not seen before – from a different country.

Thank you in advance for your assistance with this new partnership and with these personal requests.

Sincerely,
David Schwartz
